

Apollo CEO Tim Zheng said the company is looking forward to scale the India team.

Apollo to invest $30 mn in India

The company Apollo plans to invest over $30 million (about ₹232 crore) in India over the next two years.

As a part of its recent series-C funding of $110 million (about ₹852 crore) led by Sequoia, the B2B sales intelligence and engagement platform Apollo announced its first office space in India, located in Bengaluru, to house its research & development (R&D) team.

Additionally, the company will hire over 100 R&D engineers in the coming months.

“Our recent Series C funding has enabled us to expand our footprint in India with our first R&D office space set to be located at Bengaluru after having worked remotely through the pandemic,” Apollo co-founder and CEO Tim Zheng said.

“We look forward to scaling our India team rapidly. It will play an important role in bolstering our core R&D team, our business growth and global expansion. Apollo’s vision is to give its customers the most powerful and intelligent GTM platform in the industry, so they can reach their full market potential,” he said. Apollo claims to have over 16,000 clients globally.
